

I advised her to lay him on his side to expel water but she insisted "Nobody touch him"

The boy was gasping and making gurgling noises. This went on for a short time.

The lifeguard, myself and Dale Phillips then rolled him on his side with his arm under his head. Mucus, blood and water came out of his mouth and he began to make guttural noises. (VIBRATING MOAN)

When he stopped making noise the lifeguard noticed he was not breathing on his own.

At this time another lifeguard arrived with a plastic mouth piece and they began rescue breathing.

Myself and Dale Phillips then checked the boy for pulse on the neck and wrist, he had none. The second lifeguard then started chest compressions. (5 chest/2 breaths)

The E.M.S. workers then arrived and took over the situation. They hooked up an E.K.C. machine and shocked him at least twice at the poolside and once more in the ambulance before taking him away.
